Astrological Birth Control

Astrological fertility occurs when the difference in degrees between the transiting Sun and the Moon are the same as the difference between the Sun and the Moon in a woman's horoscope. When this period coincides with ovulation, and there is intercourse, pregnancy occurs. When this period does not coincide with ovulation, pregnancy, even during periods of ovulation, is very, very unlikely to occur. To insure the birth of children, therefore, intercourse should take place during the period of astrological fertility. To prevent pregnancy, one should abstain from intercourse within five days of the astrological fertility date, as intercourse within five days can cause pregnancy if ovulation occurs within that five-day period.

Research has shown that 80% of pregnancies occur during these periods of astrological fertility, and that only 20% of pregnancies occur during periods of ovulation that do not coincide with astrological fertility. Therefore, astrological fertility by itself is 80% accurate. Following astrological fertility along with determining ovulation dates through basal temperature, etc. has been shown to be 97.7% effective as a means of birth control.

The norm is for pregnancy to occur when the astrological fertility coincides with the ovulation; the healthier the hormonal system of the woman, and the more regular her periods, the greater the accuracy of this method.
