

Compatibility Report

Your Report Code: 245

Prince Charles (11/14/1948 21:14:00 London) - Moon in Aswini Nakshatra
Princess Diana (7/01/1961 20:38:00 Sandringham) - Moon in Satabhisha Nakshatra

Respect

"The flow of your relationship will occasionally bring about some mutual disrespect, though with some work you can improve the situation."

In any relationship it is respect that is most important. Love is said to, "flourish in the soil of mutual respect." When any two people get together there is a particular flow between them. If it flows well, both people feel respected, cared for and loved. If it does not flow well, both people feel disrespected, incompetent and frustrated. Men and women tend to feel loved for different things and thus need to be respected in different ways. Men feel most loved when their thoughts and actions are respected and when they are appreciated for what they do. Women feel most loved when their feelings are respected and when they are appreciated for who they are. This is not to say that a woman does not feel loved when her thoughts and actions are respected and when she is appreciated for what she does, it is only to say that she feels most loved when her feelings are respected and when she is appreciated for who she is. Men do feel loved when they are appreciated for who they are and when they have their feelings respected, but they feel most loved when they are respected for their thoughts and actions and when they are appreciated for what they do. Since men and women feel most loved when respected for different things, a healthy relationship will flow in such a way so that both people will most often be respected for what is most important to them.

Your relationship is set up so that the energy will flow from the woman to the man, which is not the ideal situation. Several difficulties can arise because of this. However, since your Wavelength score is okay, your affinity for each other will help in understanding each other and thus to smooth out the stresses. All you will have to do is be a little more patient and accepting while the understanding comes.

The flow of your relationship throws the woman into the doer role more often than not. This could have the result of the woman feeling like the man does not care about the relationship as much as she does, since she is ending up being responsible for everything. Your affinity for each other, however, should allow the woman to understand that the man does care for her and the relationship but that he does things in a more "relaxed" fashion. With a little communication, both of you will know that each cares for the other. Since the energy is not flowing from the man to the woman, the man will not get the opportunity to do as much, which will not give the woman the opportunity to appreciate the many things he might do for her. Just when the man is starting to think of what needs to be done in the relationship, the woman is already doing it. Again, the man does not get the opportunity to do anything for the woman and the woman does not get the opportunity to feel like the man is really willing to do right by her. Your affinity for each other, however, will help the woman to understand that the man will do right for her given time and if she does not take it upon herself.

A problem with having the energy flow from the woman to the man, is that women tend to bond more in a relationship when they receive and men tend to bond more in a relationship when they invest their time, energy, money and ideas in the relationship. In this relationship, with the woman being thrown into the more active role, the woman will not be receiving as much from the man and the man will not be doing as much to be invested in the relationship. Relationships need a strong bond and with this type of dynamic the strongest bond may be the bonding that takes place sexually, and this generally bonds the woman to the man more than it bonds the man to the woman. Your affinity for each other, however, should help you to develop a strong and well-rounded bond between each other, though to insure this, the man should keep it at the front of his mind to do something daily to demonstrate his love for the woman.

Men feel nagged when being told what to do. However, with your affinity for each other, the man will not have to feel nagged if he can remember that she is not trying to demean him, only that the energy of the relationship is flowing to her first, so the ideas will come often through her. Women feel frustrated when doing too much for a relationship if the man is not participating as much. Your affinity for each other, however, will help the woman understand in which way the man is participating and so she will not likely get frustrated.

Relationships all have their difficult moments. At these times of duress, it works best if the man approaches the woman to fix the problem or make amends. When a woman approaches a man to work things out or make amends she usually says something like, "I am not sure we are meant to be together." This is her saying, "let's work this out," though the feminine illiterate man does not understand what she means and replies, wishing to make her happy, something like, "maybe," "maybe not," "I am not sure," "probably not," "you are probably right," or "if that is what you want." This usually sets the woman into a rage of despair. With your affinity for each other, however, when attempting to fix things after a difficult moment you will be able to communicate where the other is coming from and sort things out if you just make the effort.

Men are generally not able to relate to their feelings as quickly as a woman. Thus, when a woman approaches a man with some request, idea or opportunity, it takes the man twenty minutes to figure out if he would feel better taking the woman up on her offer or if he would feel better doing what he is doing. During that twenty minutes he cannot really relate well to her, he cannot give her an honest answer and so he feels uncomfortable and somewhat torn inside. The woman, seeing his discomfort, begins to feel that his discomfort is with her and then wonders if he loves her. If he does take her up immediately on her offer, then usually he is not really there for a while as his brain shifts to relationship mode slowly, and while it is doing so, the woman does not feel like he loves her since he is not there a hundred percent. Again, your affinity and attunement for each other will help you understand each other and so you will be able to avoid all of these confusions, though some extra communication may be necessary to bring this about.

When the woman is being thrown into the active and doer role in a relationship, the healthy development of her feminine side may be neglected and she may become drained and even ill. Since you have a good affinity for each other, if the woman makes sure to take care of herself as well, any of these things can be avoided.

Many men have masculine issues to work out that prevent them from feeling confident and secure with their ability to do and to achieve. This can cause them to be meek. Similarly, many women have feminine issues to work out that prevent them from feeling good about themselves and this can cause them to feel like they always have to prove themselves or like they have no worth or value. In this relationship you will want to be sure these parts of you are developed and exercised so the man wants to make sure he is doing what he needs to do to grow and become stronger and the woman will want to make sure that she is doing what she needs to do to become more inwardly fulfilled.

Occasionally a man really wants to be on the receptive end of a relationship and the woman really wants to be the initiator. If this is the case with you both, then this relationship will work perfectly for you. Sometimes a person is not sure if they want to be more on the receptive end or the doing end. A simple question can help you find what you would be happiest with. Ask yourself, "Is it more important for me to be respected for what I do and what I think, or is it more important for me to have my feelings respected and to be loved and cherished for who I am?" All of us, of course, want both, since each of us has both a masculine and feminine half to our psyche, but which is more important? If you are male and if being respected for what you do and what you think is more important, then this relationship is not going to give you that without your full concentration and effort, you will be put into the receptive role quite often. If you are male and if having your feelings respected is more important, then this relationship will work perfectly for you as long as the woman wants to be the doer. If you are female and if you want your actions and thoughts respected more than your feelings, then this relationship is perfect for you, as long as the man wants to be on the receptive end more of the time. If, on the other hand, you more want your feelings to be respected and to be cherished, then this relationship is not going to give you that without you learning a lot of patience.

Wavelength

"You are not on the Same Wavelength, but you are not on Conflicting Wavelengths either."

For a relationship to be smooth, efficient and nurturing the couple has to be on the same wavelength. They must have mutual needs so that they can share in the fulfillment of those needs and they must have an innate ability to understand each other. Everything that we do in life has a subtle influence upon us. Throughout the day we crave one thing or another. Fulfilling these cravings goes a long way in helping us feel balanced and energized. When our body is craving exercise we need to get out there and move or we just won't feel okay. If we are feeling the need to be by the ocean we won't feel right until we get there. If we feel like eating a certain food, we will feel hungry until we eat that food. So it goes throughout the day. A couple that wants to spend a lot of time together has to have needs and cravings that are similar in nature and they have to have these needs at the same time. Otherwise, one or both of the individuals will not experience enough of what they need and end up not feeling right until, over time, they will become drained. If this type of attunement is not there, then the couple will also not relate and communicate well together since they really won't be tuned into the same thing at the same time.

Your Wavelength score is from sixteen to nineteen points. This is not bad, nor is it ideal. It is average. This will not damage your relationship, nor will it add to it. You won't instantly tune into each other's words or feelings, but you will easily understand each other with proper communication. You won't always feel like the same thing, but you will feel like the same thing often enough to afford plenty of opportunity to share many quality moments together. You will be able to spend a lot of time with each other without draining each other, though you won't actually energize each other.

Your Wavelength score is determined by eight different astrological measures. Each of these eight measures has something important to show you about your relationship. Continue reading to learn all about these eight factors and how they are affecting your relationship.

Excess

"Your Relationship Suffers from Excess Vata"

Each person's physical health as well as their actions are governed by three principles: Kapha, Pitta and Vata. Kapha correlates to the Chinese principle of Yin and to the Phlegmatic temperament. Pitta correlates to the Yang principle and the Biliious temperament. Vata correlates to the interplay or movement of Yin and Yang and the Windy temperament. These principles are very important in respect to our actions, health and feelings. Kapha provides the capacity for love, devotion, receptivity, rest, enjoyment and emotional response. Pitta provides courage, initiative, leadership, determination, intelligence, improvement and protection. Vata provides the capacity for the change and adjustment that life requires in order to live healthily and happily. If one of these temperaments becomes excessive, then the relationship, the lives of both the individuals and the physical health of the couple may become unbalanced and strained.

Each person has their own make up and blend of Kapha, Pitta and Vata, which is their "normal" state. This "normal" state may or may not be a healthy "normal." Regardless of a person's normal mental and physical state, when we relate to another person, the energy can change and there is the possibility of two people relating together to create an excess of Kapha, Pitta or Vata which results in their relationship having some imbalance. The imbalance will also carry over into the rest of their lives.

Astrological Factors indicate that your relationship suffers from excess Vata. Excess Vata can make it difficult to maintain focus and consistency and you may find your lives together being full of change and instability. You may especially notice inconsistency with the small things, such as eating regularly, sleeping regular hours, keeping a schedule, etc. When trying to work something out, you may find yourselves quickly becoming confused and unsure of your thoughts and not be able to explain yourself the way that you desire to. Or, if you do actually come up with a game plan, you will find it difficult to follow through. Basically, excess Vata causes the relationship to be a bit ungrounded and makes it more difficult for you both to be focused and grounded when in each other's presence. This not only creates difficulties in small things, like not having a clear idea of how to proceed or what to do at times, but also with the big thing of what to do with the relationship. When you do feel a lack of focus around each other, just a short time apart can get you both on track again.

Ancient astrological texts state that excess Vata will harm the woman more than the man. Vata is the energy of movement, grace and change, which is usually more dominant in women than in men. Excess Vata in a relationship, therefore, tends to affect the woman more than the man. So it is more likely that the woman will feel that her life is getting more inconsistent and lacking focus and direction. Excess Vata can cause the woman to suffer from fatigue, constipation, stress, and lethargy in the mornings, restlessness in the evenings and shallow or disturbed sleep. It is, therefore, a good idea to emphasize taking care of the woman's health and make sure that she eats and sleeps regularly, gets away from the stress and finds something relaxing to do. Exercise helps. Excess Vata can, of course, affect the man as well, but usually it is the woman that suffers the Vata excess the most.

Excess Vata reduces your Wavelength score by eight points over what it would be if you did not have any such excess. Even with excess Vata, your Wavelength score is still average (from sixteen to nineteen points) so you can have a relationship with this person. Lack of focus will, at times, make it confusing to relate healthily with each other and inconsistency can make your lives a bit more stressful sometimes. Most of the time, however, you will be able to connect and move forwards together with your lives.

Constructivism

"You will naturally be creative and constructive with each other."

Astrological indications reveal that you will find it quite easy, and even automatic to be constructive with each other. You will find many things to create together and share many desires together that you hope to build into your lives. You will very often desire to do and create very similar things so that there will be many opportunities to enjoy each other as you build your lives together. Your capability to create together is one of the best things for the relationship and earns you seven points towards your Wavelength score.

Temperament

Astrological indications reveal that, when you come right down to it, the woman has an independent, eccentric and intense temperament with many emotional depths and that the man has a kind, friendly, compassionate, open and devoted temperament. These are not compatible temperaments and so you lose up to six points that you could have otherwise earned towards your total Wavelength score. Fortunately, your total Wavelength score is okay (from sixteen to nineteen points) so even with these very different temperaments you will be able to relate well together, it will just take a little extra understanding.

Women with this type of astrological lunar temperament are very temperamental and can go to extremes at times. Only men with the same type of astrological temperament are considered compatible. Men with other types of astrological temperaments, such as the man in question, will have a hard time appreciating this type of woman, so the man will have to learn to be more accepting of the woman and her ways. The man will occasionally misunderstand the woman and sometimes feel threatened by her, and she will occasionally not feel accepted for who she is, so you want to go easy with each other at times when you are feeling like doing things completely differently and be careful to not be critical of each other just because you have some very different aspects to your personalities.

Friendliness

"You have a natural affinity for friendship with each other."

A primary ingredient for any good relationship is the affinity of friendship. Friends are discovered in the places we like and in the things that we like to do, so in a relationship, friendship makes two people want to do things together. Also, in any relationship, people need to treat each other in a friendly way, especially during difficult times. Astrological indications reveal that you both have a natural affinity for friendship. This will help you both enjoy the same things and the same places and also help you have the same attitude about things. There will be greater feelings of friendship and mutual understanding, and compromise, when necessary, will be quite easy. When things get tough, you will have friendship to fall back upon and will treat each other kindly as you work things out. This natural affinity for friendship earns you five points towards your total Wavelength score.

Instinctive Compatibility

Each person has an instinctive nature that they rely upon in intense situations when all recourse has left them. This instinctive nature is usually resorted to in crisis situations and in situations when a person has to do something, but does not know what to do. The instinctive nature also comes out to a lesser degree during the more intense aspects of sex. For a couple to go through intense situations harmoniously together and for a couple to bond through intense experiences and sexual experiences, it is important that their instinctive natures be compatible.

Astrological indications reveal that your instinctive natures are the same, which is great and earns you four points towards your total Wavelength score. Having the same instinctive natures will help you get through the intense experiences in life easily together and you will even bond deeply through these experiences.

Comfort

A man's temperament will either feel comfortable and safe to a woman, or it will feel more threatening. If the man's temperament feels safe and comfortable, then the woman will, of course, feel better about the relationship, and she will also be better able to get over any issues that may be making having a good relationship difficult for her. It will help her grow emotionally. The man will also benefit as he will feel like he is doing the right things in the relationship which will help him feel good about himself and, by extension, the relationship. If, on the other hand, the man's temperament feels more threatening, the woman will only have a more difficult time feeling secure in the relationship and the efforts that the man might make to move the relationship forward, or to improve the relationship, may actually cause a setback in the relationship. If that is the case, the man may become frustrated and unhappy with himself and, by extension, the relationship.

Astrological indications reveal that the man's general temperament is not particularly productive of safety and security, as a result of this you do not get three points that you could have otherwise earned towards your total wavelength score, however, since your total Wavelength points are average (between sixteen and nineteen points) you will be able to avoid any problems this may cause. You will be able to understand each other well enough and with that comes security and comfort.

This is quite a minor comparison by itself, and by itself it will not have a major say on the relationship, it is only important in the context of gaining a high enough Wavelength score as to have a good relationship.

Innate Giving

"The man has an innate ability to know what the woman needs."

When you are together there will be an innate ability for the man to know what the woman needs and he will be happy to provide it. The woman, in turn, will fall deeper in love with the man as a result of his devotion to her. This can really help you feel like you care for each other and so earns you one point towards your Wavelength score.

Mutation

"This relationship will incline you to make positive changes."

People change as a result of being in a relationship. Each person mutates somewhat as a result of being with the other. Ideally, this change is for the better and since it is part of human nature to want to change and improve, if the relationship has an innate ability to bring about positive changes, the couple's need for growing and improving will be better met.

Astrological indications reveal that your relationship is more likely to help you both change towards the positive instead of the negative. This will make the relationship more fulfilling and so you gain one points towards your Wavelength score.

Innate Sense Of Purpose

Though you have an average Wavelength score, astrological indications reveal that you do not have an innate sense of purpose together. So, you will be wise to make sure that your reasons for being together are solid reasons, or else risk growing apart in the future. If your reasons for being together are superficial, then you may well find yourself one day wondering why you are together.

Obstacles

Obstacles

"Obstacles can be overcome so that you can be together."

In any relationship so much has to happen for two people to completely be together. Many of these things are practical things, like living in the same place, both being free and unattached, having work schedules that allow the necessary time for being together and having enough money to feel secure about building a life together. Then there is always the matter of being in the same mood and frame of mind so that they can enjoy sharing their lives with each other. Getting all of these things to fall into place can be quite a chore at times and there is plenty of opportunity for setbacks and obstacles to being together. For some couples, their destinies are timed so completely differently that there will always be something, or some feeling, preventing them from fully being together. Their destinies pull them apart and simply living their very lives becomes a source of obstacles to being together. When one lives in California, the other lives in Florida, when the Californian moves to Florida, the Floridian moves to New York to take care of their mother...and so the relationship goes on, rather, does not go. Fortunately, you escape this and the timing of your destinies is not an impossible conflict. So long as other compatibility factors are okay, you will be able to sort out your lives and make any changes and adjustments necessary in order to be together.

Misfortune

Misfortune

"Your association does not bring any extra misfortune into your lives."

Besides the obvious importance to love and to be loved in a relationship, it is important for every couple to share a productive and happy life together. In fact, being in love increases our desire to live a productive and fortunate life. Some people get together and find their lives getting better and find more and more meaning to be with each other. Others, on the other hand, get together only to have everything go completely wrong, not just wrong in their lives, but wrong between them as well. Their very togetherness brings ill feelings between them along with misfortune. It is as if they are tied to a string of unfortunate events. Fortunately, one astrological measurement will show whether a couple is tied to the type of misfortune that has no end and no cure or if their association does not breed any extra ill into their lives.

Astrological indications reveal that your relationship does not suffer from any such type of unfortunate attachments. Due to your own inherent destinies and personalities you may still find yourselves attracting unfortunate events, in which case you will need to take a close look at yourselves as individuals so that you can see what issues you are holding onto that are attracting the ill events. You may also find yourselves playing games with each other or putting walls up between each other. If that is the case, it points to issues that you need to work out and not issues that are the result of your association with each other.

Assertive Pressure

While the Moon represents a person's nature and consciousness, Mars is the planet through which we assert what is in our mind and heart. For two people to have a harmonious relationship, not only must they have an innate attunement towards each other, they must also assert themselves equally, or else the relationship will become imbalanced and frustrated. The position of Mars in your horoscope, and not just in one of your Vedic charts but in three important charts, determines how much force you assert yourself with in your relationship. If both of you assert yourselves with relatively equal force, you will be able to work together to have a balanced and healthy relationship. If one of you asserts yourself more than the other, then the relationship will become imbalanced.

Your horoscopes shows that the woman asserts herself with more force than the man. This can result in the man feeling pushed and nagged while also making it difficult for him to say what he wants in the face of the woman's stronger presence. The woman may often feel like she has to do everything and that the man is just not doing what he needs to be doing, that he is really not into making things happen in the way that she is. When the woman says "no" to something the man may have suggested, her "no" may sound so loud in the man's ears that he loses his courage and focus.

The fact that you two do not have a favorable Respect measurement amplifies all of these potential problems and you may find it nearly impossible for the man to be strong enough and for the woman to be patient enough for this relationship to work harmoniously.

Conclusion

Relationships are rarely easy as we all bring our challenging personalities into our relationships. When it comes down to it, the right relationship is the relationship that we feel right about being in the way that it is. A relationship in which we love a person but hope for things to be different and to change, cannot really be termed the right relationship. It is natural for each of us to have our hopes and wishes and no relationship will fulfill them all, but if we can accept the relationship for the hopes that it does fulfill then we are on the right track to the right relationship. Further, if the hopes that the relationship does not fulfill do not become a source of damage to the relationship or do not cause us to be cruel to our partner, then it is the right relationship.

The Vedic compatibility focuses on this right type of relationship. The considerations it makes are those that determine if people can have this type of foundation together. If the five important measurements are all good, then the foundation for this type of relationship is there. The five important measurements are Respect, Wavelength, Obstacles, Misfortune and Assertive Pressure. Any measurement amongst these that is inharmonious will be a source of stress, difficulty and lack and require more effort on the part of both people in the relationship. But that is not to say that it is the wrong relationship, if that is the price you are willing to pay in order to have that person in your life and if you are willing to make the payment with the extra work, then it may well be the right relationship for you. However, it is usually seen that any of these five being insufficient create stresses that are more than the average person wants to pay for their relationship. Since one or more of these five measurements is inharmonious, this relationship may tend to support each person's bad habits and issues and make it harder to find happiness with each other as well as with yourselves.

Lack of Respect becomes more and more apparent after six months and can become very frustrating for both people in the relationship. You will have to make an extra effort to be considerate of your partner if you want to try to make a go of this relationship.

Assertive Pressure being inharmonious can lead to quarrelling and one person being pushed around more than is healthy, however, this measurement is very time dependent, so unless both birth times are accurate to within 2 minutes of time, your assertive pressure comparison may be inaccurate. If you are in doubt about your birth time, pay attention to see if you are pushing them a lot more than is natural or if they are pushing you a lot more than is natural – if so, then your Assertive Pressure is most likely incompatible. A little patience goes a long way in healing the problem of imbalanced assertive pressure, so apply that if your relationship has it. Assertive pressure being inharmonious is the least important problem and if all else is good and if both of you are reasonable people, it will not cause any notable problems.

Since your compatibility is not perfect you will want to take a good look at your relationship, the type of person you are and the type of person your partner is and see what you are really willing to do in order to have the relationship. It will certainly take some more work and effort or a bit of extra compromise than you are expecting.

~ ~ ~ ~ ~